ODE TO THE CITY

During your compacted years at Cooper Union; you have coursed the large circumference of your college campus: the city itself.

Thanks to Cooper's locus on the Lower East side, you have been richly instructed during all your waking hours. Given its variety and complexity, New York has cumulatively enthralled and appalled. For each of you, your benighted city has inexorably informed your learning, to your delight and your dismay.

As you commence your next productive chapter, you carry forth Cooper's longstanding commitment to urban betterment. Your future endeavors at saving and succoring the built environment are surely influenced by New York City, as the richest of learning laboratories.

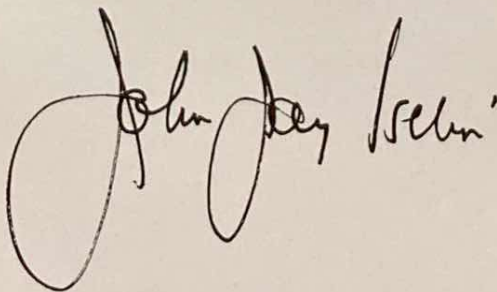

Your student years have, in fact, straddled two urban contexts. Lately, you are witness to New York's hang-over after a binge. You are experiencing the sobering of a giddy City. Exponents of hope and exemplars of design, you next need to help urban entities including New York learn to say "no" to excess.

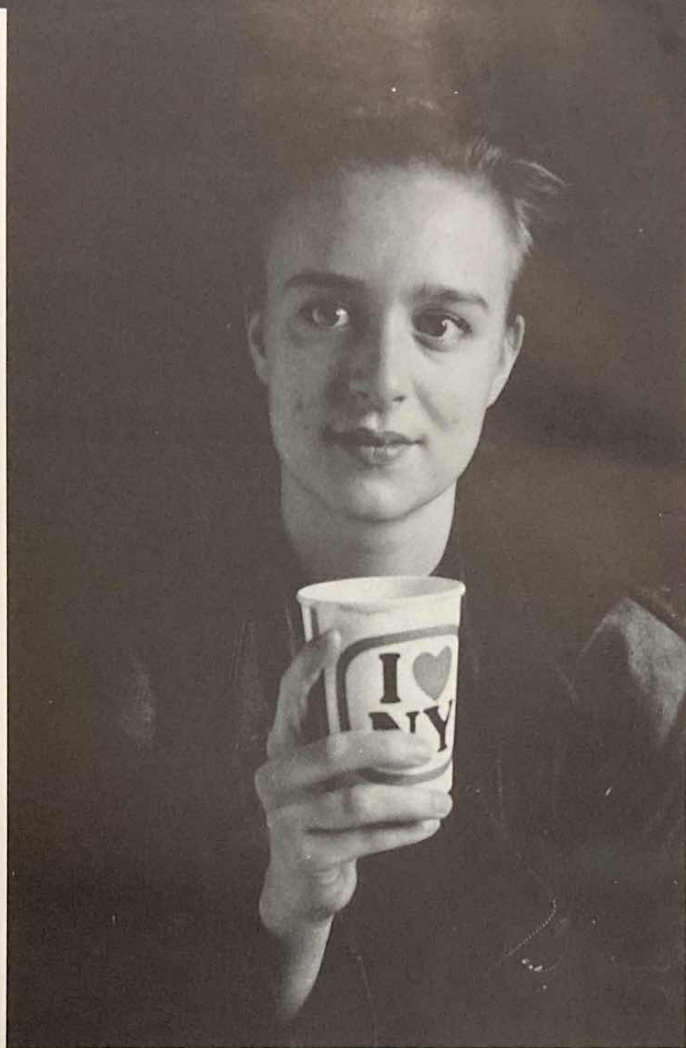

In truth, your extended campus transcends its immediate setting. In its vexing yet vital dimensions, your beleaguered City is a metaphor for an emergent global society.

Can urbanity yet evoke community? If caring is to be a condition of civilized life, perhaps an age of consumption should give way to an epoch of creativity. Your design proficiency, as artists, architects and engineers, can help chart a humane course toward a new cultural dimension.

In your fleeting years at Cooper, your college has sought to embody good citizenship. Principal preoccupation, however, has been your academic advancement. By blending the spontaneous with the structured, your City has also contributed much to your capacity for critical thought.

As attentive students of urban life, with its multiplicity of lessons from the streets, your attainment attests to your readiness for global citizenship. Now, your notable task is to help shape our endangered planet to a promising world order.

A handwritten signature in black ink, reading "John Jay Behn". The signature is fluid and cursive, with a large loop at the beginning and a long, sweeping tail.

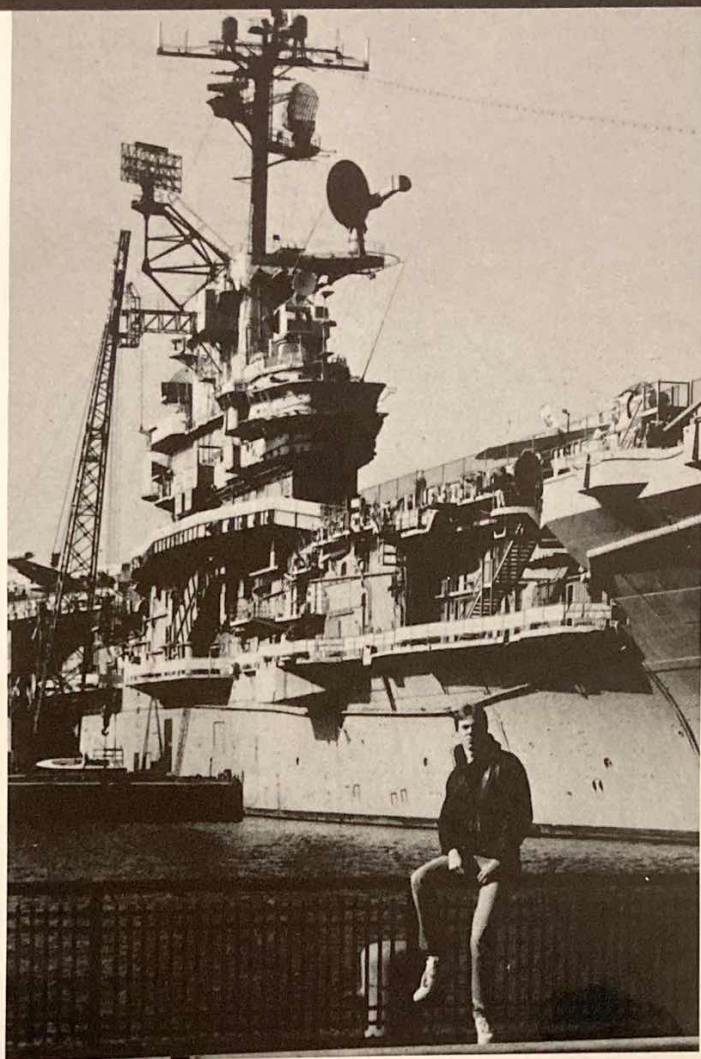

In its intricate simplicity yesterday starts tomorrow and tomorrow starts today, the future holds the questions to our answers, the best opportunities are found in the strangest places, so hurry up and take your time, this world is totally fugazi. — Thanks to all for the great times and endless memories. Four years may not be a long time, but we will never forget; all-nighters, lab partners, study groups, roommates, New York City, controversies, roadtrips, happy hour, Cartys, Phebes, free education, free food, free parties, and I bet you still haven't decided where to go for lunch. Special thanks for the support of my parents, friends, and all of my brothers in Zeta Psi.

To Joanne,

Thanks for sharing the good and the bad times.
May our friendship continue to weather all seasons.

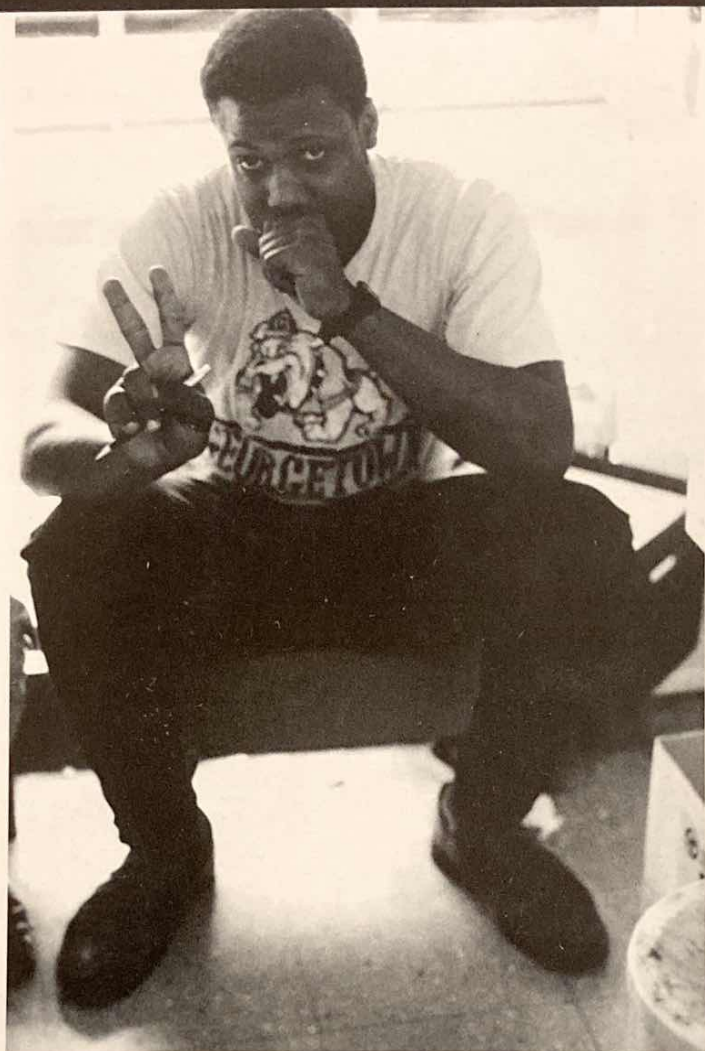

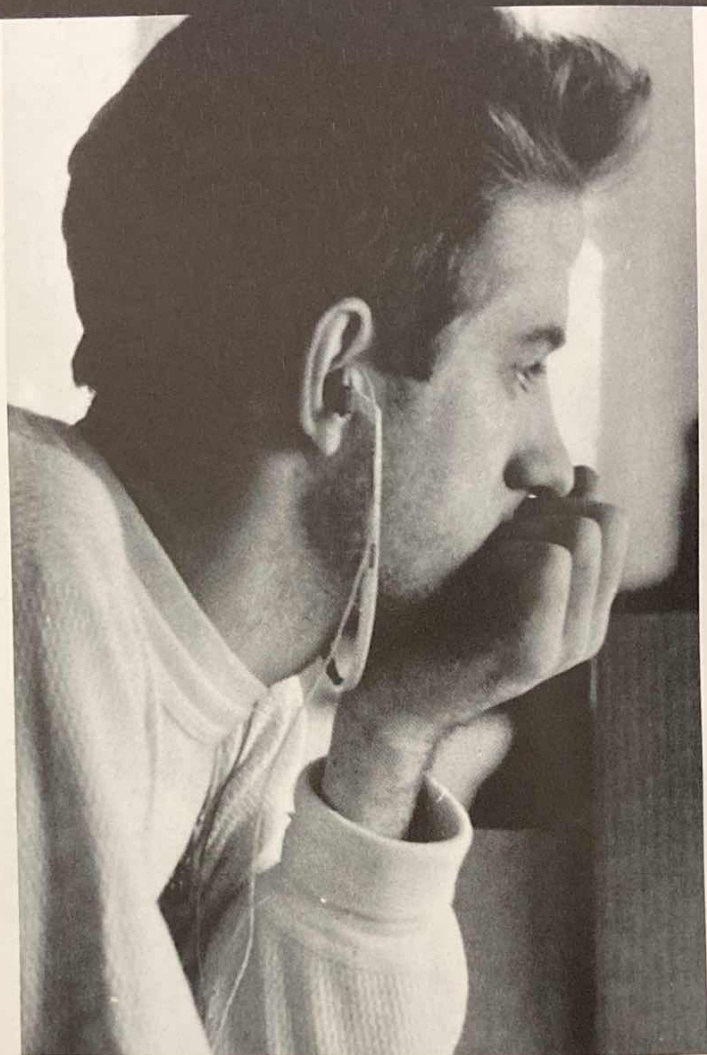

There is no need for imagination here, let me tell you, -we defeat it here- we end up by wearing it out. The birds that run across barren plains -the ones with atrophied wings; where there are no trees to perch on and no hawks to escape, there's no need to fly. They adapt.

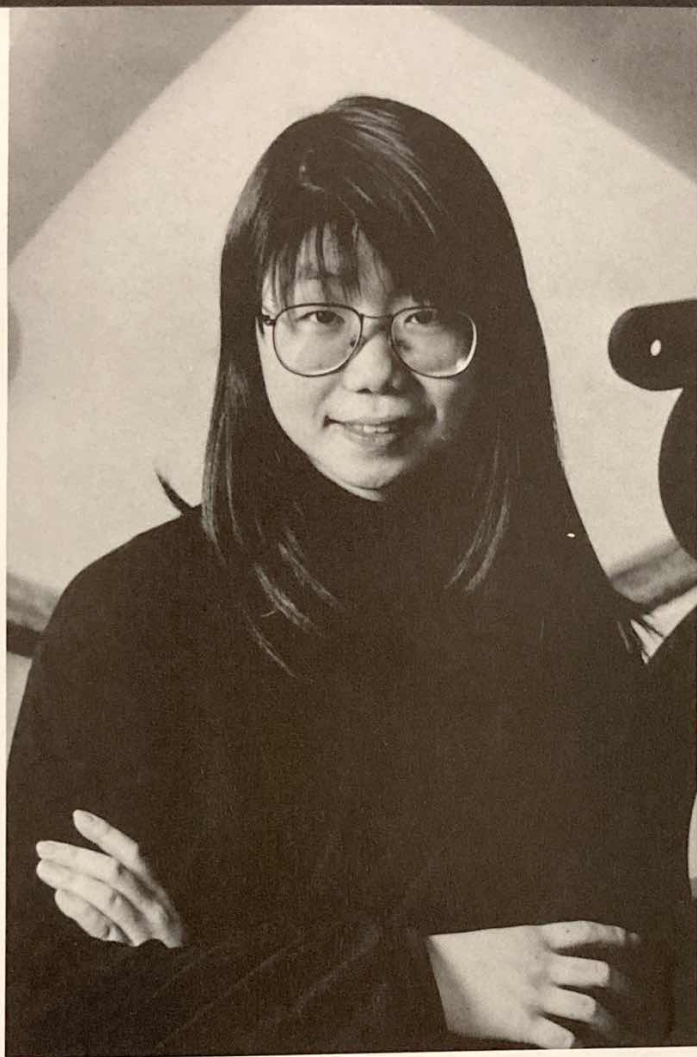

The reassuring thing about balance is that nothing moves. But the truth is, all it takes is a breath to make everything move. Nothing moves here, nothing has moved for a long time. Nothing has changed in particular except for a certain way of not looking at things, there is a certain pitch of inertia which has supported this motionless over time -the same one that sends avalanches rolling in other places. That's why into the bed of that heavy sleep that is so scandalizing.

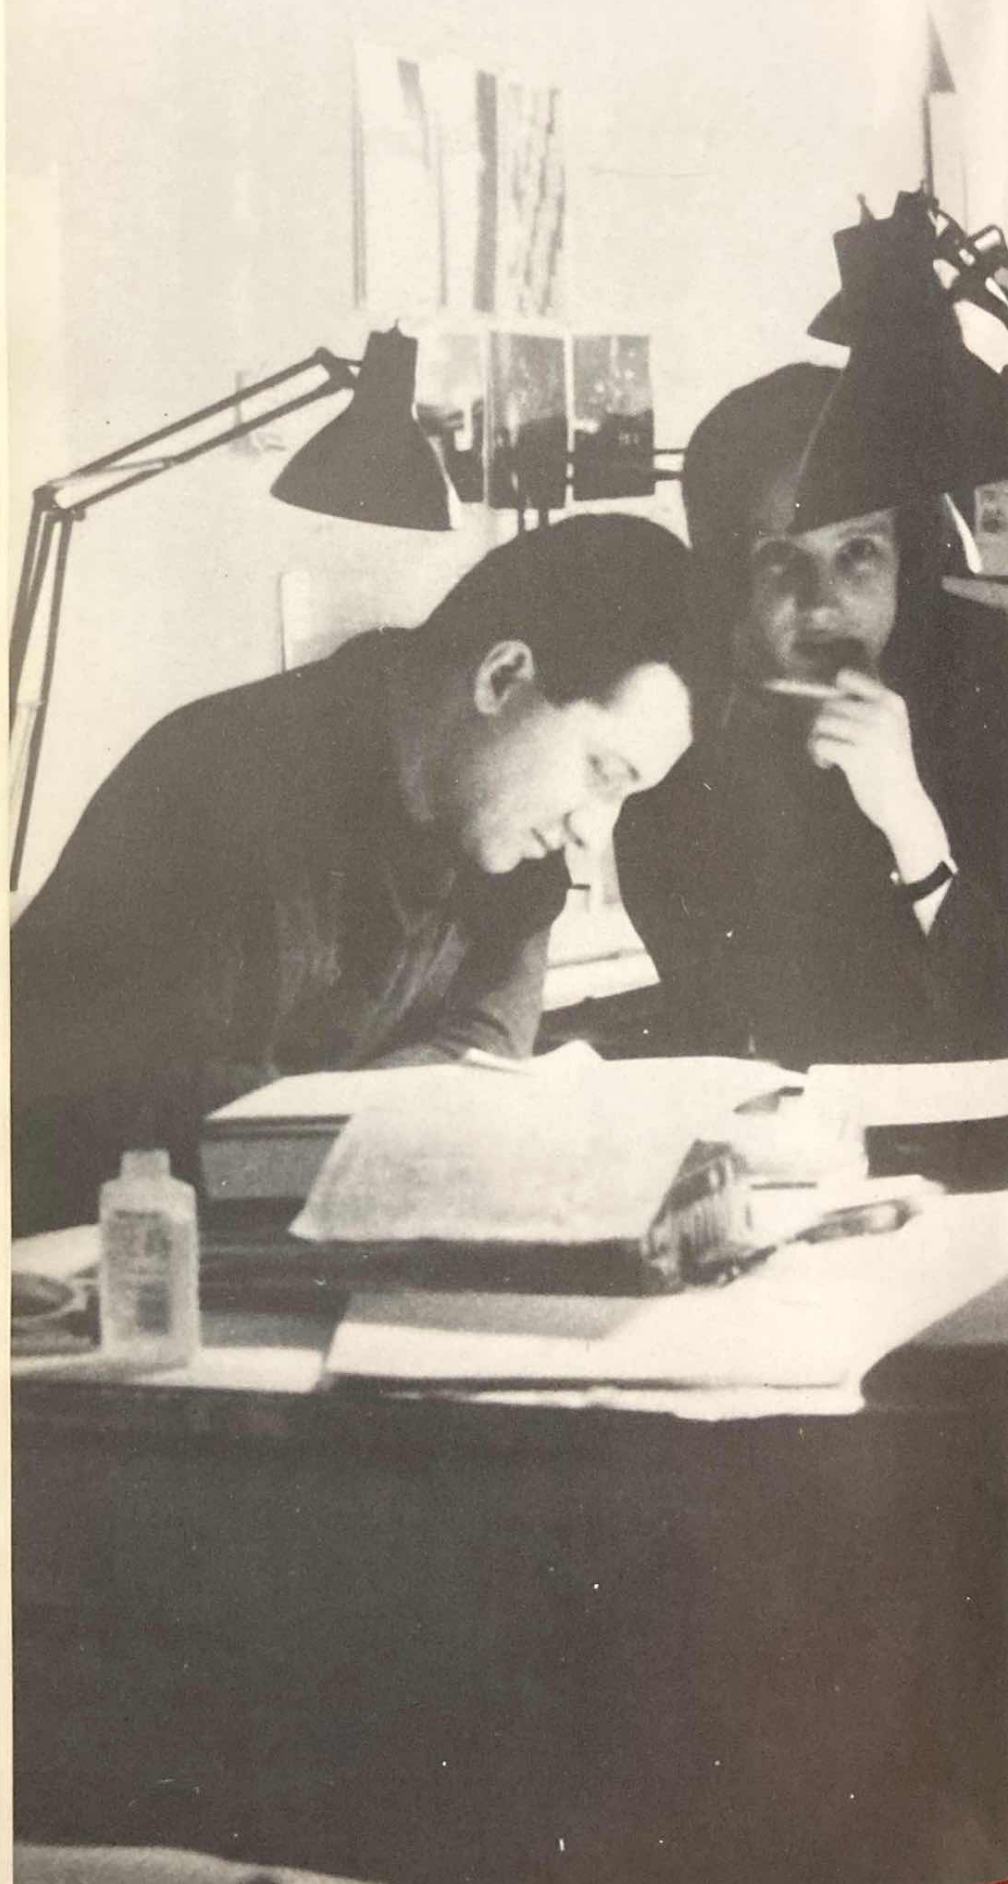

I've learned what it is to die. It's a long difficult thing, and it takes all the help you can get. Things are killed twice over, once in their functions and once in their signs -once in what they're used for and once in what they go on waiting from us.

Three people who have stood out as educators among the professors must be thanked by me. Jay Fellows, Sean Scully and Rod Knoxs.

Thank God's it's over!!! We're coming out the hard way.

First of all, I'd like to apologize to my parents for all the times I yelled at them for sending me to this school. To all the friends I've made, thanks for helping me get by.

Through all the good times and the bad times, I don't know how I made it out of here, but it doesn't matter, because . . . That's right, I'm that good!!!

Too many people to thank, but here goes:

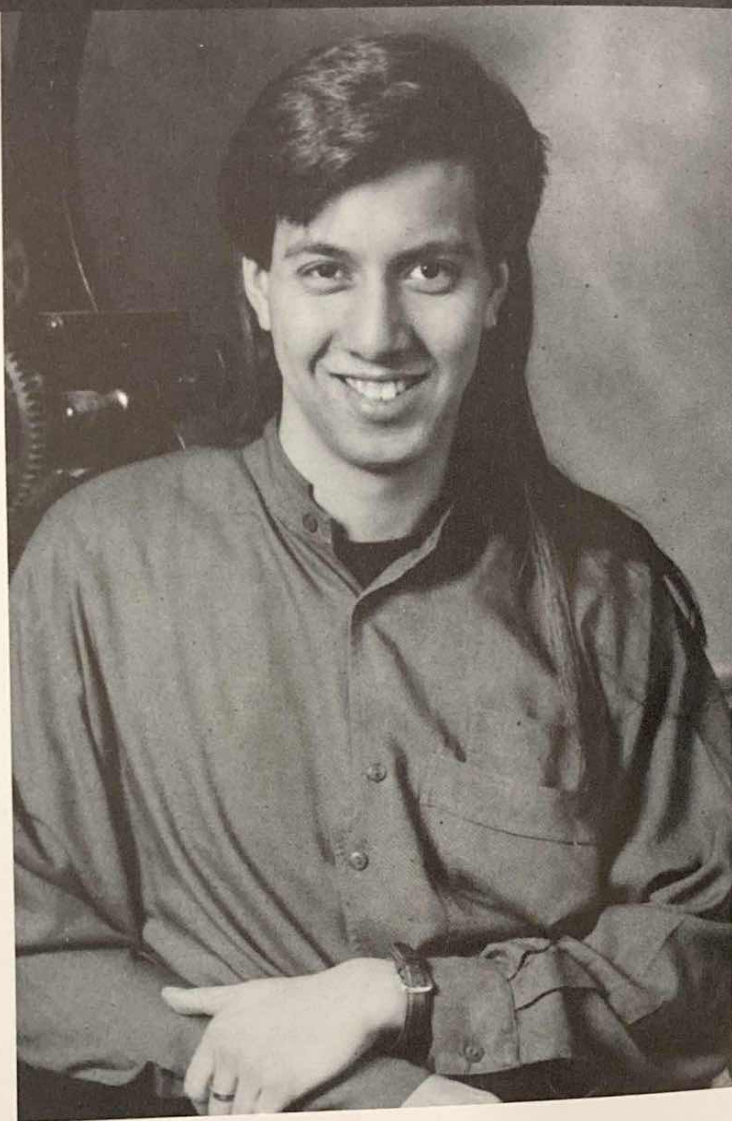

To Mom, Dad, Aji and Anu; for all of their care and support during good times, bad times, and all times. I love you all. To Ian, Henry and Phil; I never would have made it without you guys. Thanks for all the laughs, impersonations, songs about Cooper, help with work, and most of all, friendship. "In the past we have always assumed that the external world around us has represented reality, however confusing or uncertain, and that the inner world of our minds, its dreams, hopes, ambitions, represented the realm of fantasy and the imagination. These roles, too, it seems to me, have been reversed. The most prudent and effective method of dealing with the world around us is to assume that it is a complete fiction — conversely, the one small node of reality left to us is inside our own heads."

— J. G. Ballard

The last of last words spoken is Goodbye.
So before we leave, speak it again,
And remember all your friends till the end.
